Letters to the Editor:

SU hiring practices in question

Dear Editor,

I am writing to you this letter, not because of any personal feelings I have towards any members of the Augustana Students' Union, but because I feel that the Augustana community needs to become aware of some of the recent developments that have occurred. Unfortunately I cannot say that no personal feelings will come into play whatsoever because I am mad. Actually I am infuriated with the actions of some of the Augustana Students' Council. However, I am not in the mood to write a book about my gripes tonight, so rather I will highlight two issues that have recently come into play.

The first being the current hiring process of a Formal Coordinator, and the current situation as of the afternoon of February 7. I talked to the VP Internal today and asked him a few questions concerning the hiring process of this Bursary position. What I was told is that at the meeting on Thursday, the VP Internal will bring forth his recommendation of a Formal Coordinator, from there the council can decide whether or not they wish to hire this applicant for the position.

My line of questioning was then directed to specific inquiries on how the VP Internal arrived at his decision of the recommended applicant, what I discovered disappointed me greatly. Although references were requested, none of these references I have been checked. Personal interviews were not conducted or have not as of this evening occurred, and to me understanding the VP Internal gave me no indication that

Dear Editor,

It has come to my attention that a few students have a problem with the way that I am performing my job. I understand that my methods for choosing the person(s) to fill the Formal Co-ordinator position have come under protest. I must point out that many employers and managers in business follow similar practices. I feel that I was elected as VP Internal to act in what I thought was the best methods possible for the student body. In choosing the co-ordinator, I looked intently at the applications and proposals put forth by the candidates. Following this, I thought about each candidate, each of whom I was acquainted with. I tend to either of these standard job procedures would be followed.

Now I cannot speak for the entire student body, but I can speak for myself and many others who are aware of this situation. It is irresponsible. According to the Bylaws of the ASU Constitution, the VP Internal "shall supervise and arrange all ASC activity bursary positions". Quite frankly, I do not feel that the qualifications of the applicants have been explored enough for the VP Internal to be eligible to recommend a certain applicant. The formal is one of the most exciting events to occur on this campus. My concern is that the ASC will not be able to make a well informed decision.

Secondly, I would like to mention a few words concerning the recent debate about Augustana's Radio Station, CLCR. On Monday, February 5, there was a general Students' Union meeting called partially to discuss the Radio Station. I will not go into details about the meeting, as I am sure you will be able to read about it in the paper, but I would like to comment however, on something that happened that evening.

As the meeting progressed, several students and even a staff member spoke about the radio station, the issue CLCR being the key point for the meeting to be called, so that the ASC could hear the opinions of the Student body.

What upset me is that the speakers did not have the undivided attention of the ASC. Now, if somebody leans over a whispers a comment to their buddy, this is one thing. I know I did it.

value my own conclusions more than those of a perfect stranger. After all, who doesn't? This, coupled with the fact that listed references can be very predictable in their responses (nobody would list a reference that will say bad things about him or her), leads me to avoid using them as a source of information. As for personal interviews, what can be more personal than the close contact of living and functioning on the same campus for a year?

When this issue was brought to me by SerenaRae Bernhard, it did bring my methods into the light. As others were questioning me, I felt that I should question myself. I took a step back and reviewed the selection

I asked a friend a few questions that she quickly answered. However, I think the council should pay attention and not make comments to each other. ASC you asked for our opinions, I think you should at least be courteous enough to give us your attention for an hour.

Now, I want to make it very clear that the entire ASC did not behave in this manner. However, when I choose to go up and speak my feelings on the matter, I felt very frustrated that some of the ASC were not paying attention to what I had to say. So I specifically asked one of the members of ASC to listen to me. I was informed that my actions were out of line. So I would like to apologize for being out of line. I will however, NOT apologize for what I said. Article V of the Constitution states, "The ASC is responsible and accountable to the ASU for all of its actions." I would like to ask the members of ASC how can you uphold this if you will not listen to the student body when they are speaking. Simply put, by me asking you to listen to what I had to say, I asked you to do your job. Once again, I do not mean the entire ASC, but for those of you to whom this applies, I ask that you begin to think what it means to be accountable to students, and decide truthfully for yourself if you are.

I would like to note that the ASC received a copy of this letter on Thursday. I would also like to note that one extremely qualified applicant has withdrawn her application because of the mistreatment of this situation.

SerenaRae Bernhard

process. I took each application anew and set about making a decision, this time using the references. The result that I came up with was exactly the same. I therefore totally stand by my methods and my decision. I feel that I am, and will continue to act in the best manner possible for the students of Augustana.

This incident (as well as a few others, in retrospect) has really made me re-examine my position, however, Last summer, I spend countless hours on the phone from home and work, as well as much time, gas, and money coming to Camrose every three or so weeks to take care of Student Union business. During last term and this one, I was

Insight from the editor:

The Daglightale

Once again, February has come, and love is in the air. Not just any love, but Valentine's Day love. Yes, it's the season of card giving and flower sending. This holiday gives a splash of red to an otherwise dreary, cold month. A lot of people though feel left out by this day, though, because they happen to be single at this point in their lives. Although this is certainly valid, perhaps it is not necessary.

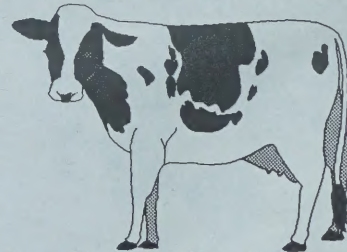

This holiday has, in recent years, become a Hallmark-fest of card giving ecstasy. Card giving North-America has changed this holiday into an excuse to spend money. But really, this holiday is more than that. It is a celebration of love between people (hint: FRIENDS ARE PEOPLE TOO!!! you can celebrate this day with your friends, even if your relationships are totally platonic!)

Valentine's Day should be a 'feel-good' sort of a day. We should declare it to be instead of a day for lovers, a declared warm fuzzie day. Even if you don't have that significant other to lavish gifts upon can still just say "Hey! You're a great person! Thanks for being the person that you are!" To whom? you might ask-- why, anyone! your roommate, your buddy down the hall, your significant other, the prof you've just written a yet unmarked exam for, the coffeshop employee that serves you coffee bright and early each day, or whomever else you might run into in the course of your day.

A lot of people tend to feel cheated because of this day. And yet, it's not absolutely necessary to have a significant other to enjoy it. Consider it to be "Hug-a-Friend Day" instead, and enjoy what you have, as opposed to what you may (or may not) lack.

And so, let me take this chance to say "Thank You" to all the Dag staff and readers-- we wouldn't be the same without you!

Have you got a beef?

putting approximately 10-12 hours per week in the office, as well as giving up entire weekends to go to conferences. The satisfaction of serving the student body allowed me to continue. I was planning to give up this position at election time in order to allow someone with fresh and innovative ideas to pick up the reins. It was my intention to take another position on council, in order to help the new council to continue initiatives left by the old council. This sense of continuity would enable a smooth transition and be to the benefit of the student body.

Now it is a different story. Perhaps a certain person has a personal problem with me, possible due to our differing opinions on an issue (perhaps CLCR?). If so, I would like to see her come into the open with me on it and not hide behind other pretences. Leastways, I now realize how insignificant my contributions to Augustana life have been. When my term and duties as VP Internal are complete, I am going to step down from student council and not return. It is remarkable how so much can mean so little. I guess a valuable lesson has been learned. The old adage goes "Looking out for #1" or something to that effect. I guess I'll have to do a little more of that.

Viewpoint: Your Valentine romances!

Valentine's day is a day for romance and love. It is an opportunity for people to show their loved ones how much they really care. So, I wanted to find out some of the sweetest or most romantic things that people have done for people they care about. I asked some Augustana Students: "What is the most romantic thing you have ever done for someone or what is the most romantic thing someone has done for you."

Susie Brownell

"I had just had my wisdom teeth removed and there had been a really bad storm, so there was tons of snow on the roads. I was totally swollen, feeling kind of down, and I couldn't eat anything. I was just about to go to bed, when the doorbell rang. It was my boyfriend, he had come all the way over on the bad roads to visit me. And he brought me my favourite drink-- a strawberry-banana orange julius. It was so sweet!!"

Petition circulating campus

Dear Editor,

Over the course of our years at AUC, the primary goal of the school has been to provide us with the highest quality of education possible, to obtain a "Liberal Arts Education". In order for us to reach this goal, we need instructors to guide us along the way. Augustana has a history of providing students with the highest calibre of educators possible. However, AUC is losing one of its best professors, Dr. Jeffery Walker, whose contract will not be continued for the upcoming 96-97 academic year because of financial cut-backs. This is a great loss to both the school and the students. Dr. Walker has demonstrated great enthusiasm towards his profession, dedication to his students and is one hell of an organ player!

Dr. Walker's assets go far beyond the classroom. He's actively involved in the Augustana community in such ways as helping to organize the Debate Club, participating consistently in Chapel, and supporting AUC sports teams, to name but a few examples.

There is a petition circulating around campus with the purpose to voice our wish for Dr. Walker to remain apart of the Augustana community. This will strengthen the decision of Dean, President, and Budget Committee to somehow find the funding necessary to keep Dr. Walker as a part of the faculty.

Dr. Walker has always gone out of his way to help students in their academic career, and in this way, we are trying to show our appreciation. His absence from this institution is not just a loss for present students, but also to all future students of AUC. He has given up a lot of his spare time, patience (if you were ever in any of his classes, you realize that this is one of his strongest qualities!) and to date, has yet to cause any serious lab accident! So please, if you have not already done so, sign the petition to show your support, because every name counts.

The Dagligtale

E.T. will call on Valentine's Day.

That evening-- Wednesday, February 14-- American astronomer Julie Haynes Lutz, in a free, public lecture at Augustana University College, will describe "The Search for Extraterrestrial Life". In the chapel in the K. Glen Johnson Faith & Life Center, it will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Could life exist on other planets in the solar system? What are astronomers doing to search for extraterrestrial life? It's such questions as these that she'll tackle.

During the noon hour on the day following, Dr. Lutz will make a second presentation, this one entitled "Planets and Moons". Open to the public, this talk will begin at 12:10 p.m. in

Founders Hall M020. "I'll discuss some of my favourite objects and sites in the solar system," she states, "and the future of planetary exploration."

Her appearance in Camrose is made possible by the American Astronomical Society and its Shapley Endowment Fund, which supports its visiting professors program.

A professor of astronomy at Washington State University, Dr. Lutz is director of the institution's astronomy program. As well, she chairs the Department of Pure and Applied Mathematics.

"I wanted to be an astronomer from age six," she recalls, "when my dad pointed constellations to me in the night skies." Widowed last year, she mentions that her husband had been an astronomer too.

"For 29 years," Dr. Lutz adds, "all of the family cats have been named after stars. Right now, I have Achenar, who bears the name of a bright star at the end of the constellation of the river Eridanus."

At Washington State University for 25 years, Dr. Lutz has been a research fellow at University College London twice, and the visiting resident astronomer at an observatory in South America. She has engaged in research at some of America's best known observatories-- Lowell, Lick, and Kitt Peak.

A graduate of the University of Illinois and San Diego State University, she is a member of two honour societies. Dr. Lutz belongs to four different astronomical societies, and half-a-dozen other professional associations.

Susie Brownell
The Dagligtale

Here at Augustana, Sociology professor Kieran Bonner has addressed the issue of a rural vs an urban upbringing and which is the better locale for raising children. Bonner began his studies five years ago, using the radical interpretive approach of investigation. This type of information gathering is based on using people's personal experience and interpretation of information. This method of research is considered more subjective than scientific investigation which is more objective due to its statistical nature. Using the radical interpretive investigation, Bonner attained information by interviewing thirteen parents in formal interviews and fifty people in casual conversation. After a long and arduous process of writing about his findings, having his paper critiqued and making numerous revisions, McGill/Queen's University Press agreed to publish his findings in a book.

The first part of Bonner's book discusses how urban and rural life have changed since the industrial revolution. It used to be that rural life meant community and family; and urban life meant factories and the workplace. Rural life was more isolated and concerned with the events of the small community. The city was big and was concerned with their own affairs and worldly affairs as well. This is not the case today, there are no longer clear distinctions between rural and urban life. Isolated towns don't really exist any more and due to the invention of the television, all people now have access to knowledge of world affairs.

But even after discovering this lack of difference between rural and urban life, Bonner was still intrigued. He was intrigued because despite his findings, people were still saying there was a difference. This difference is found in the view of parents raising children in a rural vs an urban environment.

Parents nowadays do not have the support of and connection to their extended family as they did in the past. Parents are now in an isolated situation where they have the sole responsibility for the upbringing of their children. To find support, parents look to small communities for help in easing the burden of looking after their children.

Professor Bonner found that there were three main factors that parents felt were better about raising children in a rural as compared to an urban setting. The first factor is safety. Parents perceive that a small community is safer than a city. Parents therefore feel a reduced sense of anxiety when it comes to the safety of their children. The second factor is the matter of convenience. Kids nowadays are involved in numerous activities. It is the parents who have to get the kids to and from their various activities. In a small center like Camrose, everything is usually no more than a 10-15 minute drive away. In this respect, a small town is more convenient for parents. The third factor that parents appreciate about smaller towns is the "visibility factor". Parents have the sense that even though they can't be watching their own kids all of the time, someone else will be keeping an eye on them.

Bonner found that parents who had experienced both rural and urban centres thought that the small town was better for their parenting. Although the parents themselves may not have liked living in the town. Personally for Professor Bonner, he feels that living in a small center like Camrose has contributed to a reduced sense of anxiety for him. Living in a small town makes parents more comfortable.

The convenience of a small town also frees up time for parents so they can do other things besides driving the kids all over town.

Although it appears that living in a rural center is better for bringing up children, Bonner emphasizes that responsible parenting is more important than location. However, parents may find their jobs of child rearing a little easier in a town because the burden of their responsibility for their children is eased by the community.

If you are interested in finding out more about rural vs urban upbringing you can read Professor Bonner's book. It will be published some time this year and will hopefully be available in the Augustana library next year. The book is titled "A great place to raise kids?" Experience, knowledge, interpretation and the dilemma of the urban-rural discourse.

Foreign language to come to residences

The Dagligtale

In cooperation with the Modern Languages Division, Residence Life will be proposing to set aside certain areas of the residences for selected students of French, German and Norwegian so as to afford the student intensive exposure to both the language and culture that she/he is studying. Whilst the latter is, in and of itself, an invaluable opportunity for the student to practise the language she/he is studying, it is hoped that such an exposure will encourage the student to envisage the possibility of spending a term or a year abroad at some time in the future. For further information, contact Mark Chytráček or your language professor before February 29. Native speakers who may not be taking a language course are welcome to apply.

Adventurer to venture to Augustana

Ken Frederick
The Dagligtale

Adventurer David Pelly, in a show-and-tell appearance in Camrose, will consider the future of Canada's oldest wildlife preserve, the Thelon Game Sanctuary, perhaps now threatened.

On Friday, February 16, the veteran arctic traveller will weave natural, native, and 20th-century history into what is described as "a comprehensive and exciting tale." His free, public presentation will begin at 8 p.m. in Room 010 in Founders Hall on the Augustana University College campus.

Mr. Pelly is on a cross-country tour to present his multi-projector slide show, and to introduce his new book, Thelon--A River Sanctuary.

One of the sponsoring agencies, the Canadian Recreational Canoeing

Association, says of his presentation, "This is a moving story of the greatest of Barren Lands rivers, the Thelon, and its surrounding wilderness." Canadian International Airlines and Canadian North are co-sponsors.

Created in 1927, the Thelon Game Sanctuary in the Northwest Territories is the largest fully protected wilderness preserve in Canada. But its future is uncertain.

The boundary of the new northern territory, Nunavut, will cut through the heart of the sanctuary, so discussions about its preservation are underway among governments, Inuit, and Dene. A new management plan is to be finalized next year. Will Native hunting be permitted? Mineral exploration? Would such activity effectively mean the end of the sanctuary?

From Cambridge Bay--that's 300 kilometres north of the Arctic Circle on Victoria Island--Mr. Pelly knows well the Thelon wilderness. He's canoed the river many times, so his stories and slides are rooted in personal experience.

He first went to the Arctic in 1977 on a canoe trip. In the years since, he's returned regularly, even in winter, and has paddled thousands of kilometres of Barren Ground rivers, and travelled by dog-sled for hundreds more.

A writer, his work has appeared often in Canadian Geographic, and in Equinox, The Beaver, Nature Canada, Canoe, and Kanawa, as well as in American and British magazines. Thelon--A River Sanctuary is Mr. Pelly's fifth book on the Arctic, its land, people, and history.

Daytime DJ comes to CLCR

David Shield
The Dagligtale

Tired of listening to taped broadcasts of 930 CJCA on CLCR while student DJ's are off? Want a real, live DJ to jolt you out of your bed? Well, look no further.

Brendan Cummins, a non-student here at Augustana will be filling up the airwaves with his unusual personality. Cummins is volunteering his time here at CLCR in a work placement program.

Cummins is by no means a stranger to radio. He did the morning show on CKUL (University of Lethbridge radio station) for two years. Although there was a few run-ins with the CRTC (thrice to be exact!), Brendan promises that there won't be any such problems here at Augustana. Cummins picked a placement with a university radio station because of his previous experience with Lethbridge, and it's far easier to get hours on campus radio than it is with professional stations.

There were many reasons why Brendan was drawn to broadcasting. He claims that people say that he has the right voice and the right style to be a DJ. Plus, he really liked the movie "Pump Up the Volume". Although Brendan does claim the job can be difficult because you're trying to entertain people you'll never see.

Brendan claims that he will play anything on his show. For example, he played Ashley McIsaac and "Weird Al Yancovic" in a row. (Can you do that?)

As to his opinion on the great CLCR funding debate, Brendan is quite vocal. He claims that having a live broadcast rather than pre-recording of other stations most of the time will rejuvenate the station, and get more people listening. As well, the addition of an almost full-time DJ for free is definitely a plus for the station. He claims that CLCR is typical of most student-run organizations; that a few people do all of the work, while the majority aren't involved and don't care much about it.

Quoting Brendan: "I think you have to not be all there to be a DJ". Well, he's certainly proving that theory.

CLCR makes impact at meeting

Amanda Cardinal
The Daglightale

At the Students' Union General Meeting on February 5th, many concerned students and DJ's attended to share their views about Augustana's Radio Station. The question of whether Augustana needs a radio station was brought forth by the third-year representative, Mike Walsh, who brought this concern of his constituents to the Students' Union. According to Mike Walsh, many third-year students feel that there is no need for a radio station because not a lot of people listen to CLCR. Mike also brought forth some points as to why the radio station should be shut down:

1. Accountability - There is no one to supervise the DJ's during their shows, therefore allowing incidents such as the use of vulgar language on the air.

2. Cost - The $3500.00 given to CLCR ($1500.00 goes to the station manager and the remaining $2000.00 is for expenses) could be put towards other activities that are in need of money such as the library or to pay off the debt due to damages at the last Class Bash.

3. Size of the school - Larger schools are able to support a radio station because they have more money and more listeners than a small school like Augustana.

People rebutted these points, saying for accountability that vulgar language is still likely to happen, whether there is a supervisor. These incidents may not happen often but the possibility for them will always be there.

For listenership, people agreed that it cannot be determined how many listeners the station has, a lot or a few. One student compared CLCR to the library, stating that, like the radio station, it cannot be determined how many people use it, therefore should the library be closed too?

Another good point is that should the radio station be shut down to fund other activities? The Students' Union already donated a generous sum of money to the library and it is not justifiable to take money from one activity to pay for the debts of another.

For a final point, Augustana University College is a Liberal Arts and Sciences education. This type of education provides students with various access to learn a variety of skills. CLCR is a part of the Liberal Arts and Sciences experience because it offers a place for students to learn new skills, it is a way for students to express themselves, and it is a place for DJ's, listeners and the community to get enjoyment. There are currently 35 shows on the radio with 59 DJ's. These people would all be affected if the station was shut down.

Both sides provided very good arguments as to whether or not the station should be shut down. It is up to the majority of the student body as to whether or not to keep the station running.

The next Dag deadline is March 1st.

'Media Board delighted'

Sue Storvik
The Daglightale

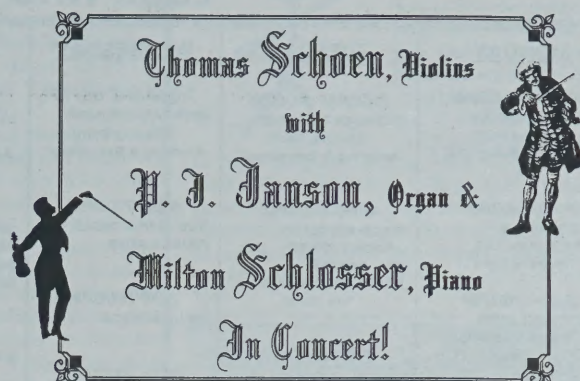

The overwhelming support shown for the radio station was welcomed with relief by the Media Board. The applause metre registered a victory for CLCR's continued funding. Overall, three students spoke against continued funding of the station. Nine students spoke in favour of CLCR's continued funding. No doubt about the results.

The ASC was pleased that 81 students attended the General Information meeting in the chapel Monday evening. Students came armed with their respective arguments. Many came away relieved at the response in favour of CLCR. Some came away not so happy.

The arguments came from many different perspectives. Some of the common themes were, for example, Augustana is heavily slanted towards choirs, music, drama and the arts, and sports, but what is there for activities for those who do not participate in any of those activities? That is the niche for CLCR. It fills a very important vacuum. Other comments included, the radio station is good bang for your buck at $2.40 per DJ per week, the radio station provides a place to learn transferable skills, a place to learn how to explore, a place to learn leadership and organizational skills, and a place to simply have fun. Letters were brought to the floor by Dale Swanson from past grads of AUC in support of CLCR's continued existence. The letters expressed that CLCR is an integral part of a student's experience at AUC. This opportunity must not be taken away from any student. Emotions and passions were running high on occasion, but that just added to the electricity in the air. The debate ran the gambit from thoughtful reflection to harsh accusations. There were no holds barred, and rightly so. Media Board chairperson Erik Bjorgan commented after the meeting, "I am very pleased with the outcome." He added, "Our media (The Dag and CLCR) is at an evolutionary crossroads, we must support and encourage the positive growth that has occurred in the '95-96 year." It seemed that this sentiment was shared by many. The Media Board will make the recommendation to Students' Council that no further action be taken on CLCR and that its full funding be continued in the '96-97 academic year and beyond.

Victoria to Charlottetown. Furthermore, the music that comes out of the "Great White North" is some of the most driving, humorous and inspirational music on the market. Most of all, this music touches the hearts of Canadians because unlike other American or European music, this stuff sounds Canadian. Listen in on Saturdays at 7pm for the sound of our country's heartbeat!

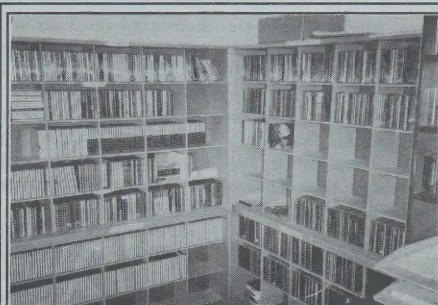

Since last November, when I premiered my 100% Canadian content radio show, many people have asked "WHY?" "Why do a show where your selection is so limited?" My common response is always on the lines of "limited?" This is my first point. Canadian bands are not a rarity-- they're everywhere. From and will be the program director for CLCR for the second semester. Although it is the second semester and alot of you have many important activities that you are already involved in I encourage you to try and make time for CLCR even if it is just turning on the radio and givin it a listen. Most of you have probably heard of CLCR by this point in the year, and if not hopefully you will by the end of the year. I feel that campus radio is an important part of University life on and off campus. I look forward to working with many of you this semester. And if you have any questions feel free to give me a call at 672-7362.

Yes, the radio station DOES have music!

the sun & the crow show

This is a cool show that will be trying out the wild one in you, and others. We play more of the unusual bands that most have never heard of, so this is the time to plus in your stereo or your TV and listen to us on Wednesday nights from 8:00 pm to 10:00 pm, so if you like what you hear and want to put in your 2 cents, give us a call and we'll play your requests as long as they're cool and meet our standards. And if you're still not motivated to listen, we give away prizes too. So tune in, or we'll personally come after you.

So how in the heck DO I tune into CLCR???

If you're like many who've never quite managed to receive CLCR through your Radio Shack Ghetto Blaster Grad Gift from Aunt Gertude, but have always though it'd be neat to hear your friends on the Radio.... (FEAR NO MORE! THERE IS HELP!) You have now entered "GET WIRED" month CLCR style! We will be, until the Logo contest closing date February 29th, trying to wire as many radios on and off campus with the ability to receive CLCR 101.5 FM Cable! "WOW!" you say to yourself. I know! But there's more! We wanna know you've "Gotten Wired!" There are prizes for the floor/dorm who's gotten the highest % and/or # of wired Augustanaites! As well as individual draws for prizes too! On top of that we wanna see the schedule from the DAG hanging by every Radio on Campus! There will be DJ's available to help you "GET WIRED!" Some will be "Getting You WIRED" during their show's with remote broadcasts and they will verify that you've "BEEN WIRED" Clip this coupon and you pick up your wire at the SU office and have it verified by one of the many DJ's or find me Lowell and I'll be more than happy to help you out. For those who are already "WIRED" Clip the form and get verified. Listen and win!

This month's Taste Test: Hot chocolate

Perfect for on these cold winter nights, or when nothing else will do.

Erik Bjorgan
The Dagligtale

Weight Watchers Calorie Reduced Instant Hot Chocolate (Rich Chocolate Flavour)

$3.29/120g, 10 servings/box, $0.28 per serving

Of all of the brands we tested, Weight Watchers rated the poorest. Granted, this is a diet food, but if you want to binge, do it somewhere worthwhile. Don't buy this pseudo-chocolate gunk. It tasted chemically and almost salty; its flavour, while it was strong, was not chocolaty in nature. As far as texture goes, this brand was harder to get to dissolve than some of the other brands.

Known to the lay person, as "crud" or "cruds" or "floaties", this phenomenon made one member of our panel, "want to puke". According to another member of our panel, this stuff would make good embalming fluid, but it wasn't worth finishing otherwise. The Weight Watcher's brand ranked 7th out of the 7 brands that we tested, and gained an overall score of 3.6 out of a possible ten... one being awful, ten being excellent.

Generic Instant Hot Chocolate (Safeway)

2.49$/500g, 18 servings/bag, $0.14 per serving

College students probably know better than anyone what it is like to go grocery shopping. All that really matters to us is the price, since most of us are poorer than dirt. So, what do we do? The generic brand of hot chocolate is characterised by its spartan, functional blue plastic bag appearance. For this reason, during our taste test, this non-brand was referred to as the "blue bag" brand hot chocolate. And is it cheap? You bet! This brand is the cheapest brand per serving. But do you get the most bang for your buck from "Bag-O-Mix"? Well, not really. This non-brand rated sixth. It wasn't really all that good at all. Texture wise, there was foam on top and it was very creamy, but it was an artificial sort of creamy. One of our panel put it best when she described it was "chocolate coffeemate". It had a strange chocolate taste, to the point where we almost had to guess what it was. Someone thought it tasted a bit like coffee, and while coffee is good, it isn't what you expect to get when you buy hot chocolate. Overall, this brand fared a bit better than the Weight Watchers; it had a much lower score on the crud meter, and rated 5.5/10.

Cadbury's Instant Hot Chocolate

$3.29/550g, 19 serving/container, $0.17 per serving.

Cadbury's attempt at instant hot chocolate was kind of disappointing, since the company is well known for their other chocolate products. It mixed well (if the person mixing was competent) and had a fairly creamy consistency, although some complained that it was a bit watery. The biggest problem with this brand was that the flavour was simply was not there. There were a few floaties, but that problem was fairly minor. Cadbury's packaging was different from the other brands we tested. Instead of individual pouches, Cadbury packaged their mix in a resealable canister. This best and would not be our first choice. It ranked fifth overall, but it was the second cheapest brand per serving, which should also be taken into consideration. Out of ten, this brand earned an average overall score of 6.2.

Lucerne Creamy Rich Hot Chocolate Mix

then this brand might not be the best pick, however, it is well worth a try. It is cheap and it is good; you can decide for yourself whether you are willing to spend the extra 6 cents a serving for Carnation. Lucerne received an average rating of 7.6/10.

Carnation Hot Chocolate (Rich Chocolate Flavour)

$2.19/280g, 10 servings/box, $0.22/serving

Of the non-gourmet brands, Carnation was by far the best that we tested. It mixed very well, those of us who knew how to handle a plastic stir-stick managed to create a cup of hot chocolate sans crud, which, as any connoisseur will tell you, is the holy grail of instant hot chocolate. It dissolved well and was very creamy and smooth. It was very sweet, rich, creamy, and satisfying, as it should be. It is a bit more expensive than some of the other brands, but since it gained an overall rating of 9/10, it might be worth your while to spend some of the change you've found during the week, splurging on the brand that is very good indeed.

Victoria Inn (Double Dutch Chocolate Flavour)

$0.79/29g, single serving package

This gourmet hot chocolate definitely proved itself better than the garden variety. Its texture was excellent, and it had very good flavour. It was creamy, rich and very good. This brand received an average score of 9/10, which is the same as Carnation, however, everyone in the testing panel preferred it to Carnation. Cost is more definitely a factor, however, for moderately special occasions (birthdays, celebrating the return of someone special, etc.) the extra cost may be worth.

Land O' Lakes Cocoa Classics (Chocolate Supreme Flavour)

$0.99/35g, single serving package

Of the brands we tested, this was by far the best. The best of our knowledge, this is the ultimate hot chocolate on the face of the earth. It was the only brand that we tested that gained unanimous perfect tens; everyone ranked this the best variety of hot chocolate that we had. Sure, the price was large—we're talking a buck a mug. Still, people are willing to pay close to that for a can of pop, and a Coke isn't likely to make one feel like royalty. This brand is the brand of choice for special occasions (Valentine's Day, anniversaries, when the Queen visits...) and is by all accounts, excellent. It tasted like imported chocolate, very creamy and almost nutty—there was a hint of hazelnut present. I think we insulted this brand by putting it in a styrofoam cup, however, since we are college students and don't go for that sort of thing, we gave it and even better compliment by rolling our eyes and mumbling "mmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmm chocolate!".

gives people more control over how strong they make their hot chocolate and is also potentially more environmentally friendly. However, it makes results a bit less consistent. Cadbury gets a thumbs down from us for not putting a measuring scoop in their package. In spite of the extra waste this would cause, it would make using this brand way more manageable. In any case, Cadbury's was mediocre at

$1.79/280g, 10 servings/box, $0.18/serving

Lucerne was a pleasant surprise. At only four cents more per serving than the worst brand, it came in a very respectable fourth place. It mixed well, was just right with respect to sweetness, and was creamy in texture. Another big plus for it was that it actually tasted like dark chocolate. If you prefer the flavour of milk chocolate to dark chocolate,

As Our Heads Spin-- Augustana's continuing saga, part 5.

Avalée Harlton
The Daglightale

When it was finally 7:01, Judy still had not arrived yet at the predetermined rendez-vous place for her chess date with Tom. He was devastated. It was obvious that she had ditched him. By the time the clock said 7:04, our hero was nearly beside himself. Then, at 7:06, he heard a knock at the door. He jumped. Maybe it was her! He quickly checked his suave appearance in the mirror, and did a pit test, to make sure that they didn't smell too much. And finally before calling the person in, he arranged himself casually on the bed. "Come in!" he called out, and the door opened. To his dismay, it was only his concerned and hard working RA.

"Is she here yet?" he asked eagerly.

"Ummm, does it look like she's here yet? And no, I'm not hiding her under the bed, just for kicks." poor Tom was at wits end, when suddenly there was another knock at the door. "Come in!" This time, he wasn't expecting her at all.

"Sorry I'm late-- dad called and wanted to tell me about his latest attempt at cold fusion. Have you got the board ready?" Tom was now floating on cloud nine now. No! she hadn't forgotten him!

"Actually, no, I don't have a board here... I thought that you would be bringing one." "No, but I suppose that we could go to my room instead if you want..." she responded uncertainly. At this point, her roommate could be up to absolutely anything, and Judy was often uncertain as to what that might be.

In fact, at this very instant, her roommate, Anne, was up to no good. She was on the internet looking up student newspapers. What she was finding, could surprise anyone. Yes. The Dag's next deadline was March 1st. As she exclaimed this point in surprise, the guy sitting next to her turned to her and started to chat about this. A pleasant conversation ensued. "Did you read about the Radio Station in the last issue? It sure is quite the hot issue. I think the SU would be stupid to get rid of it."

"Fer sure! In fact I listen to it when ever I can." she responded warmly. The pair then continued to talk for quite some time about the media issues at Augustana. In the end, it was proposed to go for coffee at the coffee house.

Back with the chess playing duo, it was decided to attend the movie instead. Although the idea of sitting through a really bad action flick did not appeal to Judy, the thought of spending two hours in a dark movie theatre with Tom, did. And so, off they went to see "Heat", at the Bailey Theatre.

Once they arrived at the theatre, it was agreed that they would share a bag of popcorn. They then went to find the perfect seat, in the balcony, of course!

The movie began just before the pair had exhausted their repertoire of small talk. The theatre then grew dark, and settled down to watch Al Pacino do his stuff. The popcorn that the pair shared was tasty, but became delicious as Tom reached into the bag just at the same time as did Judy (quite unintentionally, of course!) Their hands met, and then did their eyes. They knew then that they were in love.

Look Mom! The results from last issue's contest!

There were two winners, who answered the question "WHAT ARE GRAPENUTS?" in the most original way. Each recieved a double guest pass to Bailey's Theatre.

Erik Bjorgan-- "Grape nuts are the evolutionary result of Camrose's favourite pastime: drinking. The common grape, seeing the overwhelming success of the common peanut in terms of consumption quantity, has evolved into a hybrid form, like a grape, but nuttier in order to increase the probability that it will be consumed."

Joy Grambo-- "Grape nuts, well... originally from Tanzania, grape nuts would fall from trees thus hitting people on the head. Then, while expressing thier grief and pain, they realized that nuts could be used for something. They cracked them open and found a substance inside, eventually used for making Kool-Aid-- GRAPE Kool-Aid!!!"

LOOK DAD! IT'S THIS ISSUE'S CONTEST!!!

Just fill in the missing person in the blanks of these famous couples (if you don't know an answer, don't worry, just give your most original guess, and we'll consider it) Then, bring it up to the Dag office by March 1st. What do you win? A highly sought after double guest pass to the Bailey Theatre.

So Mark, what are RRSPs?

Mark Lira Denarri
The Daglightale

It is quite evident that a large portion of individuals out there do not understand what RRSP's (Registered Retirement Savings Plan's) are or the benefits they offer, not to mention just how amazing they are and why the government has created them. One could write a book about them and many have (if you are really interested pick one up). This short article however is just a brief overview of some basic things people need to know. Many of you are asking the question, I am just a student, what am I going to do with this kind of information? The answer is that some students do have a tax problem, however slight it might be. If you pay taxes you should have an RRSP. More importantly, the reality is that today's students are not going to have much or any government assistance when it comes to retirement (except for the RRSP) and the responsibility of saving money is going to rest on each individual's shoulders. I don't mean to add pressure and stress to the already stressful occupation of being a student but knowledge is power. Have you ever heard of the not much rule? If you don't make plans of your own future, you'll probably fit into someone else's plans, and guess what they have planned for you: NOT MUCH!

Nearly all Canadians have a tax problem and for that reason they should be registering their investments. RRSP's are the wealth builder's tax shelter. Simply put, they are a tax deferral plan approved by the government. The problem is that many people don't have a basic understanding of how to play the tax game. If they did, they would be maximizing their RRSP's every year. At present only 25 to 50 percent of Canadians even contribute, and in Alberta the average person spends $1400.00 a year on Video Lottery and contributes $1000.00 to their Retirement Savings Plans. It's no wonder that so many seniors are poverty line! Some of the short term benefits to an RRSP are: your contribution is taken off your taxable income decreasing the amount you are taxed on, possibly putting you in a lesser tax bracket. Depending on the tax bracket you are in your tax refund for that could be upwards of 50%. How would you like to make upwards of 50% on your investment in the first year you invest?

The long term benefits of an RRSP is even better once you understand how money works. Your RRSP investment is allowed to grow tax free until you take it out. Here's an example of what RRSP investments can do.
Deposit=$6000.00/year;
Interest Rate=12% annually;
40% Tax Bracket; Values/end of year
Non-RRSP RRSP
Year 10 53,826 117,927
Year 20 161,708 484,192
Year 30 377,927 1,621,755
Year 40 811,280 5,154,854
Even if you are still in your 40% Tax Bracket after 40 years of investing and withdrew your entire RRSP invest at that time (not suggested) you would still have over 3 million dollars. That's a little bit more than $800,000 isn't it?
The unfortunate truth of the matter is that most investors don't know their options when it comes to Registering an investment as a Retirement Savings Plan. Most opt for "guaranteed" investments which in many cases mathematically fail in providing for retirement needs. Any questions can be directed to the DAG Office or the Students' Union Office.

THE KNEW

*I look his way time after time,
In hopes someday he'll turn and look mine.
I like him more than he'll ever understand.
What can I do to get noticed by this man?
He sits there not knowing or maybe he does,
If he ever considers me, I'll only be used.
I'm in search of something much deeper than that,
But if we ever have something, I'll be the doormat.
This happens to me time and time again,
I'll keep letting it happen as I can never refrain.
He has so much power and I am so weak,
His affection and honesty is all that I seek.
But in his world I'm an object, a one-time thing,
I'll wait for his call, but the phone will never ring.
Would he change his mind if he knew how I felt?
How whenever I see him, my heart begins to melt.
Next time he speaks, I'll fall for his line,
Because his face is heavenly and his body divine.
As much as I wish for it, he'll never be mine,
Right now I am aching, but with time I'll be fine.*

Searching for a deeper meaning
Trying to read aloud
See through the thin disguises
Spot the devils in the crowd
Searching for something
Just beyond my fingers reach
I don't know where we're going
But the well is just too deep
Falling forever through a veil of thinning mist
My life is more than nothing
I don't want to be kissed
By the one who shakes the tree
Blown over in the wind
That shakes my foundations
Revelation comes to those who seek
The dawn will come and pierce the veil
And depth will be revealed.

*Gaytan loves her chickens and dirt
Kihn and Jay do nothing but flirt
Kelli is always in a hurry
Travis doesn't have a worry*

*Jax and Pal love their music
Where as Gord tends to abuse it
Tracie and Leslie are very shy
Korrie wants to find a guy*

*Jon and Kirsten flushed their fish
You can always find Nicole in the dish
Cath's laugh is extremely loud
Of his marks Karl is proud*

*Gina always makes the coffee
Richie likes to play ball hockey
Kim is hardly ever around
Shawn is into every sound*

*Greg and James have good Soul
Eric loves to Rock and Roll
Moe is a guy you can find outdoors
Jerry's always lookin' to score*

*McBurney's picture is on our wall
Him and Jerry never miss last call
As you can see Bergh is the best
We'll always rule over the rest*
